The summer of the beautiful white horse

William Saroyan

HANDOUT (MODULE-2/2)

After throwing the boy, The horse ran off. It took them half an hour to find it. By now it was dawn and everyone was awake. Mourad took the horse to a deserted Vineyard of a farmer. That afternoon uncle Khosrove came to Aram's house. Then another visitor by name John Byro also came there to complain that his white horse had been stolen a few days ago. Uncle Khosrove became wild on hearing the complaint. Aram ran to Mourad's house to tell him that John Byro wanted his horse back. Mourad replied that they would keep the horse for six months. For the next 2 weeks they rode the horse every morning. One day they came across John Byro the owner of the white horse. He inspected the horse and said that it looked exactly like his missing horse. Mourad told the farmer that his horse was named "My Heart". The farmer replied that since he knew their parents and they were so honest and no family member of the tribe could never tell a lie. The next morning the two boys took the horse to John Byro's Vineyard and put it there. That afternoon John Byro came to their house in a carriage drawn by his white horse. He told Aram's mother that the horse was returned and it looked stronger and better behaved but uncle Khosrove shouted at him.
